In the future, Christianity may be better understood as the dominant religion of the global South. The numbers that Jenkins cites are remarkable. Of the roughly 2 billion Christians worldwide, Europe still claims a plurality, with 560 million believers — although that number includes many who are counted as Christian only on the baptismal rolls of their emptying churches.

Equally, the sign that they themselves have received which guarantees them their future is the holy spirit. The spirit is to Christians and the church what the cloud and fire were in the wilderness: the powerful personal presence of the living God, holy and not to be taken lightly, leading and guiding the often muddled and rebellious people to their inheritance.

Lee R. Bruner - The Age of Ages and the Christian's Future

This book is focused on the idea of the future, and for Huessy there is no future without Christianity because Christianity creates the future. He argues that Christ was the first mature man of history, the peak of glory to which man has been growing, who burst into the middle of history and draws mankind up into His own maturity as a race, by the Spirit in the work of the Church.

Does Christianity Have a Future? - The Daily Beast

A Christian mission? A world mission? If either of these is the focus of our discussion, that kind of mission does not have a future. If the focus is on the mission of God, we can talk about its future. We can talk about how it relates to the whole world and what role Christ-followers have in that mission.

THE FUTURE OF THE WORLD CHRISTIAN MISSION - Restore Hope Today

The future of the church is unknown but one thing is very certain. If the church plans to "maintain in size", they will have to develop ways of effectively reaching this age group or the church will basically "dry up and die", not because of the message but because of a lack of regeneration (older people not having the energy to evangelize, work, provide the finances, dying off).
